May Prevent Development of Heart Trouble, Health Director Says.

By The Associated Press
COLUMBUS, O., Nov. 5.—Rheumatism and possibly other preventable heart trouble, says Dr. H. G. Spaulding, state director of health.

"Disease of the heart," he explained, "is the most common cause of death in this country and there is no accurate way of showing just how many of these cases were actually caused by the rheumatic fever which is the British name for the disease. It is estimated that 45 per cent of all deaths from heart disease are due to this cause and that two-thirds of the patients contracted their rheumatic fever before the age of 15."

"It has been found that early removal of rheumatic infection, and attendance with so far forward the prevention of recurring attacks of rheumatism, and there is no doubt that if children and young persons suffering from sore throat were placed immediately in bed and kept there for a few days,

2,000 AUTO THEFTS ON OHIO DAILY LIST

That's The Number Checked by State Bureau, Registrar Reports.

By The Associated Press
COLUMBUS, O., Nov. 5.—Automobile thefts at the rate of 2,000 per day are checked through files of the state bureau of motor vehicles.

The information is sought by telephone, telegram and mail by law enforcement officers throughout Ohio and in neighboring states. Twenty-four-hour service is maintained by the state bureau here to supply the information.

But automobile thefts are not the only law violations checked through the bureau. Glen M. Dally, registrar said. Inquiry into the ownership of automobiles of hit-and-run drivers and accidents are made many times a day.

The motor vehicle bureau will make its information available to all members of the new state highway patrol when they start operations about Nov. 15 to aid the checking of improper registrations, overloading and reckless driving.

FLASHES OF LIFE

By The Associated Press

CHICAGO—Business, with Edward Nichols, is business. "Judge," he said, "it's my business to get drunk. Otherwise how could I sell beer orders for the company I work for? I've got to be sociable with all the bartenders. That's salesmanship."

He was addressing Judge John J. Rooney, who let him go, but made him promise to be good.

GALESBURG, Ill. — Twenty Knox college freshmen signed a pledge not to shave any more until their football team wins a game, and inasmuch as their footballers haven't done anything like that in the last 15 starts, it looks like there might be a pretty good crop of whiskers in sight.

BELOIT, Wis. — An example of farmers' cooperation was given by 30 neighbors of E. H. Greenberg on Thursday.

The farmers built a 32 by 70 foot barn in one day, with the exception of shingles and the cement work to replace one that recently burned.

ST. PAUL—Police Patrolman William Moore had visions of being a hero.

Swiftly he clambered up a ladder to the third floor of a burning building in response to calls of "help."

The trapped victim was a parent, forgotten when its owners fled their apartment. Of floor Moore carried it to the ground.

The Stars Say

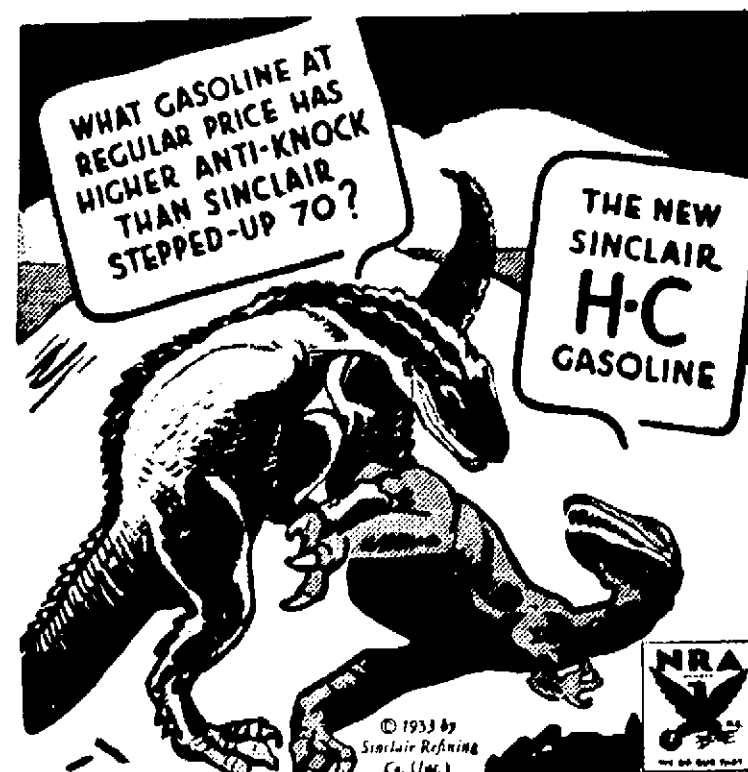

For Tuesday, Nov. 7

THE LUNAR aspect for this day are particularly promising for those in the employment of others, who are encouraged to seek advancement, or preferment at the hands of those in authority. But nevertheless there may be some gesture of promotion or advancement without corresponding financial increase. Indeed there may be personal loss of money or there may be depletion in cash, through extravagance or otherwise management of excessive generosity.

Those whose birthday it is may be prepared for a year of pleasant, untroubled, success or promotion in employment, or other gratifying tokens of esteem. But a corresponding financial advancement is not probable. There may be personal depletion of funds through extravagance or otherwise management of excessive generosity.

A child born on this day may be capable, ambitious and trustworthy in employment, reaching high favor and standing. But its tendency to extravagance or other impulsive outbursts of its substance should be carefully directed in youth to paths of thrift and frugality.

Red Cross Nurse Is Busy Person, Reporter Finds On Tour With Worker

Note—Below is one of the articles explaining activities of the Marion Red Cross chapter, which will launch its annual drive for $25,000 and 2,000 on Armistice Day.

By EDNA S. DUTTON,
Marion Star Staff Writer.

From real life might be written by Miss Mary Breneman, Red Cross nurse, who takes her the breadth of the city's unfortunate homes of perishing time each day and minute whose sole existence is the help derived from the agencies as the Breneman does not tell. Instead, she keeps a record of her work as required, and stores away in a place after piece of pie from family life. Months perhaps, when illness or another call in the community, she finds time to write about the former patient's journey to her is a provides ample proof of the amount of mental comfort she brings to the patient and puts an end to the patient's "nothing" days.

Helps School Girl
The little teen-age school girl recovering from a serious pneumonia. A week ago, she looked so good and healthy, and nights of an- no more on the part of mother, but thanks to the Red Cross nurse, she is now well and recovering. True, it's a break for the family, and the above water, thanks to the management on the part of the father being kept working on his job a few days each week, but they will, through, barring misfortune, be a patient in here I must be patient, and the Red Cross nurse her car before a well- come and the next instant a 14-year-old woman, with brown eyes and a gorgeous gray hair. She has had a fever, but her illness has not af- fected her gay disposition. True, she never thinks of that, but she never working on a con- siderable entering. The visit winds up with a date for a professional at the next day.

Baby Needs Attention
The next stop finds a baby, just a week old. Nothing serious, but a little trouble with the bottle. The visit turns into a friendly discussion with mother, and nurse getting the business of determining the proper amount of feeding for the husky little miss. Of course, attending physician will be the last word on the proceedings.

Then the tables begin to turn. The little car noses its way into the day's less prosperous residence, and stops in front of a dozen cheerless looking faces. Here bedside care is administered an elderly patient, not feeling so well as she had the day before, but who unquestionably feels much more comfortable as the nurse's visit comes to an end.

The next call brings a new name to the nurse's list of patients, the mother of six and herself only 38. She is expecting another member to her little brood. "No, she has nothing prepared in the way of garments for the new arrival. It takes all the father can scrape to- gether to keep food in the mouths of the family," Miss Breneman is told. Further questioning brings out the fact that they had received help from the city the week previous and that the head of the family was then away in search of work. The promise of the Red Cross sufficient bed linen for the mother and clothing for the new arrival from the Red Cross nurse, and lifts the mental burden from the mind of the mother, while the promise of garments already cut out to be made by hand brings a smile to her face and a promise of busy hands during the next few days.

Glasses Needed
Then there is the patient of glasses for a little school girl. Every organization we appeal to does all it can, but there is no money available right now for cases of this sort. Miss Breneman explains. The mother seriously at- tempts to insist on talking things over with Miss Breneman and would be "so pleased" if something could be done about it.

Does Miss Breneman work on a schedule? Indeed she does. Early morning hours find her calling on the mothers with tiny babies. Mother and babe are given a bath, change of linen and clothing and a check taken on their progress every day for eight days. Calls are made through the next few weeks in the interest of infant welfare.

Next on the program are the most serious cases of illness, and on down the line to the convalescents, surgical dressings and minor cases. In addition Miss Breneman visits the five schools each week. A visit to one school a day is her program unless an epidemic breaks out, when extra calls are made to inspect the children of the class- rooms in which the illness is dis- covered.

Miss Breneman answers calls from private physicians, the fam- ily themselves or calls from friends or relatives interested in cases. Her slogan is prevention of disease, and in visit is com- plete without a worthwhile bit of information regarding diet, im- munication and prevention of ill- ness.

Runs Many Risks

When she ever get a call she is afraid to answer. Never, so far as the nurses is concerned. Her modest gray uniform with its starched collar and cuffs are her badge of helpfulness and protec- tion. Only once, she recalls, was she dubious regarding her sur- roundings and she is positive that she never would have entered the house in any other clothes save the uniform of her profession.

A bulwark in Miss Breneman's work in the city is the nursing com- mittee of the Red Cross, of which Mrs. Walter E. Miley is chairman. Assisting also in the work is a medical advisory committee composed of members of the Marion Acad- emy of Medicine to whom all prob- lems of an ethical nature are sub- mitted.

The nursing committee provides the supplies and nursing equip- ment and problems of finance are referred to its members. The mem- bers are sponsors of the loan closet stocked with bed linen, pa- jamas, night gowns, sick room sup- plies which prove such a boon to the patient and a help to the nurse. Baby layettes provided by the committee are made by various organizations of the city. Interest in this is citywide in its reach and the problem which occasionally arises is to find material enough to supply the demand for making the garments.

Who Is This Man Bolin? Democratic Candidate For Mayor

Today ends the Municipal Campaign and Clarence Bolin wants to thank his many friends who are so loyally supporting him at the Polls tomorrow.

He entered this campaign with a program looking toward the best inter- ests of the people of Marion. He has confined himself to the issues and avoided all personalities.

Many misstatements have been made by those opposing him concern- ing the unemployment situation—such as weekly wages with free gas and water.

But Bolin's only statement is—The creation of a public works program which will provide employment at decent wages in place of compelling charity.

This old political trick of circulating vicious and unfounded reports won't work in this campaign.

Clarence Bolin is a man of high type—well spoken of by all who know him and will make Marion a Real Active Mayor.

Points Way To Peace in Armistice Sermon

Legion Post Members and Auxiliary Hear Rev. Wood at Trinity Baptist Church.

The international mind which is the only sure way to world peace, Rev. Lawrence A. Wood, pastor of Trinity Baptist church, declared in his Armistice day sermon delivered last night before a large congregation which included members of Bird McGinnis Post No. 162 American Legion and the auxiliary.

Music appropriate to the patriotic nature of the service was sung by the choir under the direction of Dale Gorman and a male quartet composed of H. F. McMaster, Charles Jones, Siebert Bargart and Ernest Patton.

Discusses Meaning

Rev. Wood discussed the meaning of the "international mind" by answering two questions, "What is nationalism?" and "What is the law of life?"

In opening he said, "Again we are entering upon the celebration of a great world event. Again we will join with all people on the face of the earth in recalling the close of the World War Prayers will be offered."

Face Problems

Rev. Wood continued his sermon in part as follows:

"The problem over which many national leaders are pondering is whether men will learn to think internationally before it is too late. The close physical contact of nation with nation emphasizes the importance of thinking internationally."

As a spark may cause a fire so carelessness may produce war. It will not be confined to battle fields and entrenched areas. The airplane and poison gas will wipe out great sections of population. No one will be able to find a place of safety and no one will be able to tell who will survive.

"Racial, political, and economic relations each contribute their part to the crying necessity of learning to think internationally. All of these call for a proper attitude toward armaments. Armies, navies and other means of national defense are needed. More necessary than these is the spirit of patriotism. It will be a sad day, if it ever comes, when men may say, 'Under no consideration will I go to war and endanger my life for my country.' Those who have seen war know its horrors. No one longer more intensely for universal peace than the man who has worn the uniform of his country. And no one realizes more keenly than he how much armaments will be needed for national defense, until the day comes when all nations shall have learned to think internationally."

Recall Sacred Hour

"When we pause and stand at attention at 11 o'clock on Armistice day morning we will need to recall all that of which that sacred hour reminds us. Great changes of sentiment have swept over men since that day. Forms of government have changed. The industries of the world have been thrown into reverse. Sentiments which contributed to noble living are being trampled under foot. In the midst of all this disaster men need to keep their faith in the possible ideals. There are three possible attitudes of nations toward nations. These are domination, isolation, cooperation. The first two have failed utterly. The last waits to be tried. World peace is the only guarantee of national peace."

RED CROSS WORKERS WILL MEET FRIDAY

Those To Aid in Roll Call Will Receive Final Instruction.

All workers in the forthcoming roll call drive of the Marion County Red Cross chapter are asked to attend a final instruction meeting Friday at 7:30 p. m. in the Masonic temple.

Final plans will be announced and supplies distributed. The roll call drive will be launched Saturday morning by forces from the Bird McGinnis post, No. 162 American Legion, aided by members of the Y. M. C. A. and several church groups.

This part of the campaign is expected to be completed by noon Saturday. The women's division will start their part of the campaign Wednesday, Nov. 15.

This year's goal is $5,000 and 2,000 members since the Red Cross is depending on the roll call for its full support for the next year, there being no assurance of a community welfare drive this year.

Ways Suggested for Use of Leftovers in Stuffing

Dear Friends in Marion:
With Thanksgiving coming in a few weeks, it behooves us to think a little in advance about the dinner for that important occasion, and whether we are going to do any extra entertaining that day for family and friends.

We are most of us still living on economy budgets, because even those of us whose wages have gone back to jobs, find the prices are higher than a family can afford to pay. So using leftovers even for economy dinners is certainly nothing to be ashamed of. And especially of the left-over can be used in a stuffing for a roast of duck, chicken, turkey, or a meat loaf.

These stuffings, nearly all use left-over bread, which does not mean stale bread. Dry bread, crumbs, left-over toast are all delicious in the stuffing. In making most stuffings, the toast, crumbs, or dry bread should first be put in a colander, and hot water poured over it, but to avoid sogging, do not allow it to stand in the water. Put meat and vegetables through a food chopper. A simple dressing is:

Four tablespoons salt pork, six cups crumbled bread; one minced onion; season with one tablespoon poultry dressing; one teaspoon salt; and one teaspoon pepper; one beaten egg. Mix, blend, and to modify, add one-half cup finely chopped celery. Or add six to eight oysters. Some cooks saute the dressing in butter, before it is put into the fowl.

Kale Dressing.
Two cups softened bread crumbs; one-half cup seedless raisins; four tablespoons melted butter; one teaspoon salt; one-half teaspoon pepper; enough milk to moisten. Use for stuffing a shoulder of pork, or a steak, roll, or for chicken or duck.

Apple Stuffing.
Three cups moistened bread crumbs; one-fourth cup melted butter; one cup chopped apples; one cup chopped celery; one-third cup chopped nuts; one-third cup seedless raisins; one teaspoon poultry dressing; one small onion minced; one teaspoon salt; one-fourth teaspoon pepper.

Cut the grapes in halves, mix all the ingredients together and stuff. Use raisins if grapes are not available, or use seed grapes, cutting them in half and removing the seeds.

Missouri Stuffing.
This recipe is a favorite in Missouri, and is especially delicious with chicken. Two cups moistened bread crumbs; one-eighth cup of melted butter; one cup canned corn; one cup chopped celery; one-third cup chopped ripe olives; one-third cup stuffed olives finely chopped; one teaspoon poultry seasoning; one small onion minced; one teaspoon salt; one-half teaspoon pepper. Mix thoroughly, and stuff into chicken, turkey or duck.

Peanut Stuffing.
Two cups moist bread crumbs; two cups tender bread crumbs; one beaten egg; two tablespoons melted butter; enough broth from the fowl to moisten; one-half teaspoon salt; one-half teaspoon pepper. Grind the nuts, add the crumbs and melted butter and egg to them and mix well. Moisten the mixture with some broth from the neck and giblets cooked in a little water. Season and use for stuffing.

Other Flavorings.
Bits of left-over meat, chicken and fish, may be added to any stuffing recipe, and improve its flavor and texture thereby. Left-over vegetables, such as stewed tomatoes, may be used to moisten a dressing; and chopped left-over peas, lima beans, corn, string beans, boiled potatoes all add good flavor and improve the texture of a stuffing.

Left-over soup, broth or consommé may be used to moisten the dressing in place of milk or water called for in the recipe. Brown bread, raisin bread and other breads, as well as biscuits and rolls are equally delicious, and may be used in place of white bread crumbs.

The important rule to follow in using any left-overs is to strictly adhere to the seasoning directions for salt, pepper, poultry dressing, a bit of Worcestershire or other condiment gives that essential bite which might be lost with the use of left-overs, and especially if they make up the bulk of the dressing.

HELPFUL IDEAS ON FOOD FOR BABIES

So many times the young mother left alone with the new baby after the nurse has gone—for good—finds a confusing mass of instructions, notes, advice from the doctor and from well-meaning relatives.

At no time does the problem of how to care for the child loom so heavily, as when she is faced with the preparation of his first foods. At the age when beef juice is recommended, mutton and other broths, and certain simple dishes the preparation of these foods because of their great importance to the child's health and growth, becomes a vastly important undertaking.

The following are the simplest rules for these standard foods. It is well to know too that certain food companies of high repute have in the last year put up purged vegetables and meat broths especially for babies. Any physician knows the names of these companies and the foods to recommend. They save time and trouble and in many examples are better than the inexperienced mother can prepare at home.

Beef Juice.
One pound of rare round steak, cut thick, slightly broiled and the juice pressed out by a lemon squeezer, or a meat press. From two to four ounces of juice are obtained this way. This is seasoned then with a little salt, and it may be fed warmed, or cold. If heated it should be placed in a cup and set in warm water. It should not be made hot or heated long enough to coagulate the albumin which is in solution, and which then appears as flakes of meat floating in the broth.

Mutton Broth.
Buy one pound of fine lean mutton, chop it, or have the butcher chop it. Have him include some bone with the meat. Add two cups of cold water and about one-eighth teaspoon of salt. Cook slowly with the bone for three hours, until the liquid is reduced to one cup, add more water if necessary during the cooking. Then strain through thin muslin, when cold, remove the fat, and add a little more salt to make it palatable. Feed warm, or cold in the form of jelly.

Some prefer to add enough cornstarch to thicken the broth, cooking it ten minutes and then adding three tablespoons of milk or one tablespoon of cream, to one cup of broth. Most babies prefer it in this form.

Junket.
Two cups fresh milk warmed a very little over hot water; one-eighth teaspoon salt; one-half teaspoon granulated sugar; one junket tablet dissolved in cold water. Stir all together for a minute or two and then allow to stand at room temperature for two or three minutes until firmly coagulated. Place in the refrigerator until thoroughly chilled. Season with a little grated nutmeg. For later children serve with a little custard sauce, lemon or orange flavored.

Barley Water.
One tablespoon of barley flour, blended with a little cold water. Add, stirring all the time to ten tablespoons of boiling water in which one-eighth teaspoon of salt has been added. Cook for thirty minutes in a double boiler and then strain. Add enough water to bring the whole thing to one pint.

Orange Juice.
Do not let orange juice stand after squeezing. Squeeze, strain off all seeds and fibres, and give at once.

POINTERS ON DEEP FAT FRYING AND SOME DELICIOUS RECIPES

It is a waste of good ingredients and the cook's time to attempt deep fat cooking without the proper utensils. First among these is the frying kettle, which should be deep of heavy aluminum, or of iron, and a flat-bottomed style. It should also have a bar and hook in it from which the frying basket is hung.

For the second essential is the frying basket, an especially designed wire basket, shallow, fitted to the kettle in question and equipped with a long handle to facilitate the use of it. Such a basket not only means that more than one piece may be fried at a time, but it aids in draining the cooked piece and draining is important to flavor, texture and digestibility in deep fried foods.

A wire egg beater or open skimmer or slit spoon may be used in place of the basket, but this retards the work and gives less satisfactory results. If possible use a thermometer, a deep fat thermometer made especially to fasten to the side of the kettle. This instrument takes the guess work out of the cookery and assures more nearly perfect results—perfect if other elements are equally good. In addition to these important utensils, there should be on hand a quantity of absorbent paper toweling to be used for draining. Any very soft paper will do, but the modern paper toweling is excellent. For certain dishes, the toweling is laid thickly in a shallow pan, the pan to be placed in a warm oven for complete draining and crisping of the fried food.

Preparation.
The kettle should be about half full of the snowy fat. Set the kettle on rather low heat to melt the fat slowly. Increase the heat to the desired temperature (see recipes) and while the fat melts, get the draining paper and pan ready, the frying basket at hand and also a tray on which to place it between fryings. Also test the temperature of the fat.

Croquettes made of cooked materials, fish cakes, oysters should be fried at 300 degrees F., or when one inch cube of bread will turn golden brown in forty seconds. Fritters, doughnuts, uncooked mixtures, 360 to 370 degrees, or bread test, sixty seconds. Chop, cutlets, 360 to 400 degrees, or bread test thirty to sixty seconds.

French fried potatoes, 395 degrees, or bread test a little under forty seconds. The fat should not be brought to the smoking point, as so many old time recipes declare; this is too hot for the fat and for the food. It is also inaccurate, since different fats smoke at different temperatures. When the fat is at the right temperature, lower the basket into it for one moment, to grease it and heat it. Remove, lay in it the food to be fried, and cook as directed. When golden brown lift the basket, hang on the hook to let the food drain a moment, then lift carefully, with a wide spoon, to the draining paper. Watch the thermometer and reheat if necessary.

Care of Utensils.
After the food is fried, and the fat is still hot, strain it through double cheesecloth into an earthenware bowl or a glass jar. Throw away howl or a glass jar. Throw away howl or a glass jar. Throw away howl or a glass jar.

Place the frying basket and spoons, draining pans and any other utensils which have been associated with the frying in a dishpan, cover with cold water, add one half cup washing soda and set over the heat. Bring to boiling, then drain off the water, cover with fresh hot water, wash thoroughly, rinse and dry.

Cheese Croquettes.
These are delicious with a luncheon salad, or as a main dish for luncheon. To make them use: One cup American cheese, cut in small pieces; one-half cup of grated cheese; two-thirds cup hot thick white sauce; two egg yolks; one teaspoon salt; one-fourth teaspoon paprika; beaten egg and crumbs for dipping.

While the white sauce is over the heat, stir in the egg yolk unbeaten, then the dried cheese. When the cheese is melted take

Casserole Cake

To make this unusual cake use two squares of bitter chocolate; two squares of butter; one cup boiling water; one teaspoon soda; one half cup shortening; two cups brown sugar; two eggs; one half cup sour milk; two and one half cups flour; one teaspoon of baking powder; one-half teaspoon salt; two egg whites; one-half teaspoon vanilla.

Pour the boiling water over the chocolate, add the soda to this and set in a warm place to dissolve. Meanwhile cream the shortening and sugar together, add the slightly beaten egg yolks to this and the sour milk. Sift the flour, baking powder and salt together and stir into the egg mixture. Beat until the ingredients are thoroughly blended. Add the dissolved chocolate and vanilla. Then beat egg the kettle from the heat and fold in the finely cut cheese, add salt and pepper. Pour into a pan rubbed with shortening to cool. Do not try to shape. Cut in squares or strips. Dip in beaten egg, then in crumbs and then in egg again. Fry, without letting them touch each other. Makes 12 small ones.

Rice and Olive Croquettes.
Two cups cooked rice, one teaspoon salt; one-fourth cup melted butter; two egg yolks; one-fourth teaspoon nutmeg; one-half cup chopped stuffed olives; egg and crumbs. Beat egg yolks, blend with the rice, and mix in all other ingredients. Shape in small croquettes, dip in beaten egg and crumbs, then in egg again. Fry until delicately brown. Serve with hot tomato or cheese sauce.

SALAD DRESSINGS THAT YOU'LL LIKE

So many times the women who attend the Cooking School do not know how to make a well seasoned French dressing. The old standard rule of three parts of oil to one of vinegar, plus seasonings is somewhat modified today by experienced cooks. It is one half teaspoon salt; one teaspoon sugar; one eighth teaspoon paprika; one fourth cup older vinegar or lemon juice; one half cup oil. Mix the dry ingredients, add the vinegar and oil, and beat thoroughly. Pour into a bottle or glass jar and keep in the refrigerator until needed. Shake well before using.

A Piquante Dressing.
This dressing is delicious on fish salads, and those having sweet Spanish onions in them. To the French dressing recipe add one-half teaspoon mustard; one eighth teaspoon Worcestershire sauce; one-half teaspoon onion juice; two drops tobacco sauce. Mix well, and dress on the salad.

Roquefort Cheese Dressing.
This is a favorite dressing for a plain hearts of lettuce salad. To the recipe for French dressing, add four tablespoons of crumbled Roquefort cheese. Blend well, and pour over the cut hearts of lettuce.

Baked in a casserole, and served from the same dish, this cake is as delicious as it is unusual. Try it on the family.

whites stiff and fold into this batter. Pour into a three-quart casserole, or casserole, rubbed with shortening, and bake for an hour and five minutes. The oven should be slow (300 degrees).

The Icing.
A seven minute icing is made for this cake. Use three tablespoons water; one egg white; seven-eighths cup sugar; one eighth teaspoon cream of tartar; one eighth teaspoon salt; one teaspoon flavoring. Have the water boiling in the lower part of the double boiler. Place the water scaled for in the recipe, with the egg white and the cream of tartar, sugar and salt in the upper part of the double boiler. Beat the mixture with a wheel egg beater steadily and continuously for seven minutes. Keep water boiling in the lower part of the boiler during the beating. Remove from the heat, pour the hot water from the lower part of the double boiler and fill it with cold water. Set the upper part of the double boiler back in place and allow to stand for five minutes. Then add the flavor. Stir until thick enough to pipe. Then spread on the cake top. Bake for ten minutes, spread frosting all over, and decorate with candied fruit.

CROONING BOY By Josephine Bentham

Buddy Could Tinkle a Banjo and Sing an Appealing Little Song, So He Hied Himself to Hollywood, Where He Became a Good Shirt Salesman

WHEN Buddy Webster was about 8, I guess he learned the market value of that smile he had. Then in those days it was a good half-dollar flash, it paid for the delight of breaking windows for the favor of stolen crabbles, for the pleasure of swinging cats by their tails. But later, when he parked a banjo on his knee, pushed back his wild mop of honey-yellow hair, flashed that successful smile of his and began to croon about his Alabama sugar—later, let me assure you, the boy had everything.

About the time he went in for cream-colored flannel pants the whole town began to speculate. It was agreed by everybody that Buddy was too good for his father's dry goods store; by everybody, that is, but the old man himself and one small girl whose name was Kathleen Treadwell.

It was rumored that Kathleen Treadwell, at the age of 2 weeks, had sat up in her go-cart, looked out a window and rested her placid blue eyes on Buddy. Since then she'd looked at a few other people, but she hadn't exactly seen them.

She wasn't bold about it. She never did a bold thing in her life nor said a bold word. No, she was one of those gentle, soft-spoken little women, one of those little women who'd sit on a hot coal for forty-eight years if those who dictate such things once decided that sitting on a hot coal was the thing for them to do.

Well, almost everybody thought it was a crime that Buddy went to New York. Buddy was missing a lot and New York was missing even more. They thought Buddy was marvelous. And what Buddy thought about himself cannot be printed, because there aren't the adjectives.

But the old man, who was a strong-minded, firm-footed old man, held out for the dry goods store, the business of which had doubled since the year 1910. "I hate to hurt Dad," Buddy explained to Kathleen Treadwell. "But it's a shame, my sticking around here. I've got the candy they want."

"There's a lot more dignity in dry goods," Kathleen told him coldly. "What's the matter with my singing?" he demanded.

This was rhetoric. He knew very well there wasn't anything the matter with his singing.

"It's all right in its way," she said graciously. "It amuses your friends. But if you could really sing I wouldn't say a word. You can't. You can just croon. And to make a profession of being a crooning, yellow-haired boy—imagine when you're 50 and getting bald like your father! No, there's a lot more dignity in dry goods."

He was annoyed, of course, but by that night he'd resumed his normal position on top of the world.

ALL the young people for miles around were at the country club that night, a night in early April with fragrance in the air and all that sort of thing. An enormous moon pasted itself on the backdrop and succeeded in making the country-club saplings look like the fragile and sophisticated trees in Japanese prints.

The girls fluttered about, their delicate skirts trailing like moth wings. And the boys ambled around, going into heavy conferences, emerging from time to time to gladden the lives of women.

I sat in the background, talking about the new trend in literature with Kathleen Treadwell's mother. But I didn't miss a thing.

I didn't have to hear Buddy Webster's voice to know that he'd arrived. Buddy liked entrances. He never liked to come slinking in any place. He had a small, no-account car which could be persuaded, upon occasion, to sound like Lindbergh landing in Times Square.

There was a moment of pleasurable suspense.

"That's old Buddy!"

"Yes, sir, that's the old Hispano."

"Hey, hey! Buddy!"

And now he stepped into the moonlight and flashed his smile and—oh, my, oh, my, the boy had everything.

He was so friendly with everybody, too, and so modest. He didn't even realize he was Buddy Webster—oh, no.

I've never seen him in such good form before or since. With his arrival the orchestra began to play. That was an accident, but it didn't seem like an accident. A dark-haired, expensive-looking little thing, visiting the town, floated into the general confusion, and Buddy just naturally reached out and annexed her. Just the way, when he was 8, he'd have reached for a cookie.

The dark-haired child's name was Ethel Jennington. She wore a silver dress with a turquoise-blue flower on the shoulder and her little shoes were blue and silver. Well, these two floated into each other's arms and danced jazz was in them, that's all, like the sap in the trees of spring. No intellectual ideas got in the way of that effortless rhythm. I'm sure of that.

It was good to see them dancing together, and why it should have been heartbreaking, too. I can't explain exactly. Perhaps because that night they'd seen each other at the crest of the wave. You know that moment when you see sea foam tossed to a spray, silver and sparkling in the heart of the moon? Well, it was like that.

Later Buddy danced with Kathleen. He treated her with the Old World courtesy he had handed out to a dear friend of his mother's. It was enough to have depressed a girl for the rest of her life.

AND from that time on I began to lose all pleasure in watching Buddy and Ethel dancing together. Not so long ago, in our independent local high school, I'd taught Kathleen Treadwell all she'd ever need to know about history, ancient and modern. She'd always been on time for class and often she'd brought flowers for my desk. And the gentle little thing knew the date of every battle in history from the time they threw rocks to the time they threw hand grenades.

Kathleen disappeared into the dressing room, spending more time there than was necessary to powder a nose of such infinitesimal dimensions. But when she came downstairs she caught my eye and smiled at me, gallantly enough.

I began thinking seriously about the situation. This new girl smiled all the time and smiled at everybody. But Kathleen smiled not quite so much, and when she did it meant something.

I tried to be philosophical. I tried to argue that the misery of youth is as keen as its joy, and as feeling. I told myself that Kathleen would get over it. But I knew better. Kathleen was the faithful kind.

After that I tried not to count the number of times Buddy danced with Ethel. But I caught myself sneaking glances at the patent-leather shoes and the blue and silver slippers, so effortlessly patterning the erratic designs of a plaintive jazz harmony.

I knew what was coming next. The orchestra packed up its instruments to a wall of protest that would have melted anything but the heart of union labor. Then inevitably they begged Buddy to perform.

He was reluctant, bashfully shy. And even I, knowing the young humbug, grinned as broadly as anybody else when Buddy swung up to the low platform and turned up the banjo strings at last.

Ethel hadn't heard him before. That was the outstanding feature of the evening. Buddy with new fields to conquer, always rose to his greatest heights.

Maybe I exaggerate a little. As a matter of fact, he just pulled a chair out, sat on it, crossed his knee and started playing as casually as if he were playing for his old grandpa after supper.

His voice was passably good, his banjo work was only a little better, but somehow he conveyed a lot with just a little of this and a little of that. We were all, you understand, sitting around him in a sort of semicircle; the old familiar court, plus Ethel. I watched the effect on Ethel. It was devastating.

She gave this devastating voice after his sixth number. This sixth ballad, a new one, expressed the nostalgic agony of a young man separated from his loved ones in the old home town. Nothing more out of harmony with Buddy's own sentiments could have been set to any music anywhere, but Buddy could make discords convincing.

He began by looking utterly miserable. His eyes very blue and wide open. The banjo moaned a couple of times and Buddy began in that hushed voice of his:

Just a dinky little house and you,
In my dinky little old home town,
Just a dinky little nest for two,
Out West where the sun goes down—
Just a dinky little house that's mine,
Just a dinky little kiss or two,
After we're wed won't it be fine
With a dinky little girl like you!

THE banjo died of a broken heart and Buddy looked right down at Ethel. "Like it?" he asked her.

"Buddy!" she said reverently, "you're wonderful. Listen, I've never heard anybody so good!"

"Go on!" he said.

"I mean it," she insisted earnestly.

Both of them had forgotten there was anybody else around. Then some one asked Ethel if she didn't think Buddy ought to go to New York.

"New York?" said Ethel vaguely, as if the whereabouts of that village eluded her. "Why, no, I tell you where he ought to go. He ought to go to Hollywood. The talkies!"

That excited all the youngsters. They hadn't thought of that before. Then Ethel spoke again, impressively:

"What's more, I'll bring some picture people here next week-end—right here to this clubhouse where they can hear Buddy sing for themselves."

Picture people. You can imagine how our young sensation felt about that. They stared at Ethel Jennington.

"I know lots of picture people," she said. "I met them when I was in Los Angeles last year."

She spoke quite carelessly—she who knew picture people. Eddie Loomis and his company are going to be on location just about fifty miles from here next week. Old Eddie'll drive over if I say so."

They were all enormously impressed and they all had a great deal to say—all that is, except Buddy himself and Kathleen Treadwell. In the solemn moment Buddy was suddenly stumped, for the first time in his life. And Kathleen disappeared quite suddenly.

EVERYBODY was a little disappointed that it was Eddie Loomis and not Douglas Fairbanks or somebody like that who was coming to hear Buddy sing at our country club. As a matter of fact, no one had ever heard of Eddie Loomis except Ada May Johnson, who finally revealed having seen him in a comedy three years before. However, Ethel seemed very proud, in her casual way, of knowing him, and she informed us that he was the coming comedy sensation of the shouting screen. A word from him, she inferred, would be just like cash in the bank for our Buddy.

Buddy all that week was going around in circles. He seemed to have forgotten that he had given only one year of his priceless life to the State University, and that convention and his father expected him to give another three.

He was agonized all his time with Ethel Jennington. It was rumored that Ethel herself was considering an offer from Hollywood. Already the two of them were climbing in and out of Buddy's putting. "You've probably never seen a history teacher."

"I don't know anything about public schools as a matter of fact," she assured me solemnly. "I must admit to a small private school on the Hudson."

I would have answered this if I hadn't suddenly remembered that the little no-account car as if they were climbing in and out of a purple Rolls-Royce. They were developing an air of distinction. As a matter of fact, I think they were bad for each other.

What Kathleen thought nobody knew. Kathleen played tennis as usual with Ada May Johnson, and got the worth-while nonfiction as usual out of our up-and-coming circulating library. If Buddy had been swept up to heaven in a chariot of fire, I don't think Kathleen would have been impressed. She'd always thought that Buddy should go into the dry goods business and she held to her theory.

About this time Kathleen Treadwell dropped in to see me. She sat primly in one of the old rocking chairs on my veranda, while I brought out a pitcher of iced tea and a big plate of ginger-snaps.

We touched lightly upon a number of unimportant topics. Kathleen had a funny, formal little way with her. She always had had, and when I was with the child I tried to talk with the solemn dignity becoming to a teacher of history, ancient and modern.

Inevitably, but not too hastily, the name of Buddy Webster was brought into the conversation.

"Do you think Buddy'll be a success in Hollywood?" I ventured at last.

She turned her serious blue eyes upon me.

"I don't know whether he'll make money—if that's what you mean," she said.

"I should think he'd be successful," I went on uncertainly.

"Buddy always gets away with everything," she agreed, in a tone of quiet despair.

I glanced at her quickly. I thought I knew what she meant. I remembered Buddy in my classes, always bland in the belief that Carthage was the name of a small town in the United States. But I usually got some sort of trouble with my optic nerve when I read Buddy's examination papers. And his excuse for not being in his class at the appointed hour would have moved the warden of Sing Sing.

But I knew what Kathleen meant. It was just about time Buddy Webster grew up, just about time he didn't get away with everything.

Neither of us realized the possibility of failure for Buddy Webster. Nor did either of us realize that failure can be

Neither of us realized the possibility of failure for Buddy Webster. Nor did either of us realize that failure can be as much of a success—for a boy like Buddy.

However, Buddy and Ethel were the idols of the community. Ethel was leaving the community immediately and against all the protests that Mr. Titus Webster could hurl, Buddy was leaving almost immediately, too.

"How does your father take it?" I asked Buddy at the last.

He looked at me a little guiltily. "Well, of course, he'd hoped I'd go back to the U," he said. "But when a man gets a lucky break—well, I think it's kind of foolish to ignore it."

"Well," I said dryly, "will you come back and see us once in a while?"

"Why, of course! Isn't this my own home town?"

And he flashed that smile of his which, as usual, reduced me to a soft, good-natured idioy.

THE whole town saw him off. Even his father was at the station.

"I gave him a dozen new shirts," he told me as together we strolled down Elmhurst avenue. "All with the new detachable collar. I invented it, thought maybe he might interest his Hollywood friends. But I'm afraid Buddy'll never take much stock in the detachable business."

There were no more words of Buddy for weeks. Then we heard that Eddie Loomis had been let out of his job. Buddy was sorry for the man, but he couldn't help being amused, having suspected from the first that Eddie's stock in Hollywood was virtually nil.

Buddy had given his name to a number of famous directors who'd been most encouraging. He expected any day to get news of his big chance. It was much more satisfactory than having to wait around for Eddie.

There was another long silence. But into this silence came the inevitable rumor. A friend of a friend of Ada May Johnson's, reported having seen Buddy. He'd looked very thin and down at the feet. He'd tried to avoid the friend of Ada May Johnson's friend.

Then it was rumored that Titus Webster had written, saying that he'd send money if Buddy would buy his ticket home and forget all this nonsense.

"It wasn't fair of him to do that!" Kathleen told me, desperation in her gentle voice. "You'd think he'd know Buddy better than that—his own son!"

"Maybe you're wrong," I said, trying to comfort her. "Maybe he'd admit he's beaten and come home like a sensible human being."

"Buddy's not like that," she said.

Well, she was right, and I knew it. Buddy had the virtue as well as the vices of the limelight addict. Buddy would starve before he'd feed on the pity of his own home town.

He was writing to nobody, and letters sent to his hotel in Hollywood were returned unopened.

Titus Webster, that stubborn old man, turned the conversation at the mention of his son's name. After a while no one ever had the courage to mention it. The old man was aging under our very eyes. But he was proud, stubborn and proud. Everybody knew that, no matter what happened he wouldn't bend to his son's will. And everybody knew, too, that Buddy wouldn't bend to his.

The boy would get along, I told myself unceasingly. Boys always did. At the same time I knew that Buddy wasn't an ordinary boy. He was the sort either to conquer the world or be annihilated by it. I didn't like to think of the road into which his bitter disappointment might lead him now.

BUT after this I didn't have much time to think of Buddy and Kathleen. My sister in Chicago wired me that her youngest child was seriously ill and that the other two were running wild. I took the next train, and during the next two months I was up to my neck. At the end of that time I emerged with one idea: That at the next meeting of the Parent-Teacher Association I was going to treat each and every mother with profound respect.

But my youngest nephew was out of the woods and the other two, the imps, were as ready as nature permitted for the fall school term. I hurried back to be prepared for my own job, which was going to seem like a rest cure after the months in Chicago.

I had let no one know of my arrival. I climbed into Hal Burrows' broken-down old taxi and rode home alone.

All the time I'd been gone I hadn't had ten minutes to write to a soul. I was almost afraid to walk up the worn front steps to the Treadwell door. For a moment I paused weakly, irresolutely, before I pushed my thumb against the doorbell.

I looked at Kathleen dully.

"Well," I said at last, "everything seems to be all right!"

She took me by both arms and shook me, gently.

"Didn't you know?" she demanded. "Know what?"

"Know that Buddy's in town!"

"Well," I said, "when I saw your face I gathered that he wasn't at the bottom of the Pacific, but—"

"Didn't you see this morning's paper? It had 'Local Boy Makes Good' all over the front page, and there was such a crowd at the railroad station that—"

"And does Mr. Webster like it?" I broke in excitedly. "The idea of Buddy's being a movie star?"

She stared at me in astonishment.

"But didn't you know? Buddy made good introducing his father's detachable collars for soft shirts in Hollywood. They're absolutely making a fortune. And when Buddy gets through college he—"

At this point Buddy himself emerged from the Treadwell kitchen, with his banjo swinging from one hand and a large piece of chocolate cake stashed in the other.

After the greetings I couldn't say anything more, being in a very emotional frame of mind.

"Go on playing your banjo," I commanded.

So Buddy sat down on the stair landing, crossed his knee, pushed back a mop of honey-yellow hair, flashed his old successful smile and began to sing—as follows:

Just a dinky little house and you,
In my dinky little old home town,
Just a dinky little nest for two,
Out West where the sun goes down—
Just a dinky little house that's mine,
Just a dinky little kiss or two,
After we're wed won't it be fine
With a dinky little girl like you!

He looked at Kathleen.

"Like it, darling?" he asked her.

"I like it a lot," said little Kathleen.

—for Everything You Need. There was a good front on the old store that was like the old man himself. I knew that in his conservative heart he was ashamed of his idolized only son, that he was just as ashamed as if Buddy had put on spangled tights and gone into a circus.

But I was sorrier for Kathleen. The old man had his store. Kathleen had nothing. With Buddy gone, something within her seemed to stop working. She was one of those women who make credible the biblical account of creation.

She went on playing tennis and reading the best nonfiction. She even appeared at the country club for the Saturday night dances. She was making a brave bluff. But I knew that youngster.

Once or twice I caught her poring over a motion-picture magazine, staring miserably at the beautiful faces of the film stars. At the beautiful Shrima so invariably roped with pearls. Oh, yes, she was suffering, in the way of suffering that quiet, faithful women know.

No one dared to speak to her of Buddy, save casually. But soon enough we began to have news of the boy.

He wrote glowingly, as we'd expected. "Well," I demanded of Kathleen, "what does he write about?"

"He writes about Hollywood Boulevard," she told me slowly.

"Hollywood Boulevard?"

"Yes. He thinks it's the most wonderful street in the world. He saw Lewis Stone going by in a Rolls-Royce. And he saw Janet Gaynor in one of the shops. He says it's like walking in a street in a dream. Any minute something might happen to change his life completely."

"But the child isn't intending just to walk up and down the boulevard the rest of his life!" I objected incredulously.

"No-o. He says that Eddie Loomis is going to put in a word for him, that it isn't as if he didn't know anybody."

MILLARD HUNT COMPANY HOME

The half-tone above gives you a fair idea of The Millard Hunt Co. organization. The top picture is of the office and the one below shows a part of the concrete yard, where "Quality" Coal, Coke, Sand and Stone are handled. The picture does not show the Building Material yard to advantage. It is located back of the office building. Reading from left to right in the top group is Walter Sipe, in charge of the building supply department; William K. Hamor, fuel department; Millard Hunt, president, and Fred Morris, office manager. The bottom group, from left to right, Ralph Wood and Lloyd Benjamin, drivers, and W. G. Johnson, yard foreman.

The Associated Press. — The 6-King Voters made Premier Mussolini both the navy and the air after accepting the resignation of Admiral Cagari, Minister of the Navy, and Admiral Giuseppe. At the same time, the king named the under-secretary of the navy, Admiral Cagari, as named governor of the place of Marshal. Mussolini sent both Admiral Siriani a congratulatory letter thanking them for their long and loyal service. The king's decree accepted the resignation of Under-Secretary of the Navy and Under-Secretary of the Air, and the military ministries of the navy and war will not be at first believed. FORD LAYS OFF MEN TO MEET NRA CODE Furlough Ordered for Half of Employees in River Rouge Plant.

By The Associated Press. — DETROIT, Mich., Nov. 4.—Half the men employed at the Ford Motor company's River Rouge plant here were laid off today, in accordance with a recent company announcement that it planned to bring average working hours within the NRA auto code of 35 a week. Company officials, while declaring that "half the men are being laid off" did not give the exact figures as to total employment in the plant. In their announcement of the layoff plan made last week they said that 9,000 men should be laid off, probably for seven days.

The last official figure given by the company for total employment at the plant some weeks ago, was 45,000.

It was stated that when the working hours of the men laid off today have been brought within the regulations of the auto code the rest of the employees will be given a similar layoff.

There were no indications that the Ford company planned a reply to the statement in Washington last week of Hugh S. Johnson, recovery administrator, that he would be glad to "consider an exception" if Henry Ford wished to give employment to the men being laid off.

STOCKS DRIFT IRREGULARLY

End News Fails to Produce Stimulus for Shares.

The Associated Press. — Stocks irregularly lower in hesitant movement as weekend news provided fresh stimulus of financial depression in the pound sterling exchange dealings. The old party to the early months of the war when Britain captured only served to confusion. The principal markets were inclined to the early dealings, soon recovered. U. S. encountered a little the bond market. Shares showed a disposition to be helped by strength of U. S. Smelting and Silver each gained 2 American Smelting and Silver each gained 2 fairly steady. American and Chemical, and a couple of points. A number of points, including steel, Johns Manville, Union, Case, and Sears while fractional recessions at Bethlehem. General year, National Distillers.

GRAIN PRICES CLOSE LOWER

Selling Pressure in Late Trading Causes Market To Turn Downward.

By The Associated Press. — Chicago, Nov. 6. — Prices on all grains averaged lower today, some increasing on all rallies. No more was heard regarding further foreign demand for corn, although November delivery of corn in Rotterdam advanced 1 cent and showed a premium over November delivery of wheat in that market. Some selling of wheat against purchase of corn in Chicago narrowed the spread between the two grains, but failed to sustain corn market advances. Corn closed irregular, 1 cent lower to 1 cent higher, compared with Saturday's finish, wheat 1 1/2 down, oats 1/2 off, and provisions unchanged to 15 cents higher.

The University of Michigan's Wolverines got by far their biggest scare of the season in their battle at Urbana, Ill., with the battling Illini but pulled out a 7-6 triumph. Here Dave Cook, Illinois fullback, is shown plunging over center for a short gain. (Associated Press photo).
